

Easy-fitting Supratrays

0800 294 470

Impression trays are as important as the impression material that dentists use. Plastic trays need to be rigid to prevent any deformation of the impression materials, at the same time they need to be comfortable for patients and available in a good assortment of sizes. R&S Supratrays fit these criteria.

In a variety of sizes and shapes, R&S impression trays are economically priced. Choose from posterior, anterior, quadrant, sideless or full-arch trays for precise impression taking even in the most inaccessible areas of the mouth. Many technicians prefer their clients to use metal trays for a higher degree of accuracy but often the price is prohibitive. Take a look at the R&S metal impression trays and dentists will be surprised. They may opt for stainless steel or aluminium perforated reusable trays, both are fully autoclaveable and are more rigid than the highest quality plastic trays.

Whatever the choice of impression trays from the R&S range or from a favourite manufacturer, Dental Sky can supply them quickly and economically.

Dr Carol Laffan recently attended the lip augmentation and cosmetic fillers course provided by Dr Brian Frank Facial Aesthetics Faculty. She said: 'I thought the organisation of the course was excellent. As you left you were really inspired to take what you had learnt straight back into general practice and I was eager to begin providing the treatments. Dr Brian Franks was very clear and comprehensive with his teaching.'

'It was a friendly, hands-on approach providing ample practise and supervised tuition. When you come away from a course such as this it can take a while to organise the necessary supplies and products. We were given a clear list of exactly what we needed to order and precise instructions of how to set it all up. In terms of the medical-legal aspects, the importance of guiding client expectations and obtaining valid consent was made clear, as well as reviewing medical histories and explaining possible side-effects.'

The European Society of Aesthetic Orthodontics (ESAO) is an independent non-profit organisation committed to enhancing the provision of aesthetically focused orthodontics by general dentists.

On 21 June in Birmingham the ESAO held a practical skills course for dentists and dental care professionals (DCPs) that was a huge success. Delegates were excited to hear from renowned speakers on topics ranging from diagnosis and retention to interproximal reduction. Attendees were also provided with hands-on sessions in impression taking, dental photography and more.

Dr Raha Sepehrara, scientific director of the ESAO said: 'I hope that delegates have found the day useful and that they can apply what they have learnt into their everyday practice. For me it has been a fantastic opportunity to meet excellent speakers and clinicians; I have learnt a lot from their fantastic presentations.' Speakers at the one-day course included Dr Andy Wallace, Dr Daz Singh, Dr Pav Khaira, Dr Ian Hutchinson and Steven Blackhall from Prestige Dental.

The London Smile Clinic in central London has recently purchased an Orthopantomogram (OPG) machine. This technology will not only enhance its range of expertise and level of accuracy but the clinic is inviting other practitioners to make use of this exceptional equipment by referring patients to the clinic.

The advanced, digital radiography produces panoramic X-rays to provide broad coverage of the facial bones and teeth in a short amount of time. They are popular with patients because films do not need to be placed in the mouth and are invaluable when assessing wisdom teeth or cavities in the interdental region.

OPG images are also beneficial to ensure the precision of restorative work, orthodontics, implants and endodontic treatment.

By referring patients for an OPG scan at The London Smile Clinic, dentists are demonstrating another facet of expertise that reflects their own professionalism.
